WAP'EN-TAC, } Gothic, as this division of a county was peculiar to the northern counties; wæpen, a weapon, and tac, tace, touch; Goth. tekan. (See TOUCH.) This name had its origin in a custom of touching lances or spears when the hundreder or chief entered on his office. "Cum quis accipiebat præfecturam wapentachii, die statuto in loco ubi consueverant congregari, omnes majores natu contra eum conveniebant, et descendente eo de equo suo, omnes assurgebant ei. Ipse vero erecta lancea sua, ab omnibus secundum morem fœdus accipiebat; omnes enim quotquot venissent cum lanceis suis ipsius hastam tangebant, et ita se confirmabant per contactum armorum, pace palam concessa. Wæpnu enim arma sonat; tac, tactus est—hac de causa totus ille conventus dicitur Wapentac, eo quod per tactum armorum suorum ad invicem confœderati sunt." LL. Edward Confessor, 33. Wilkins.

Lye seems to doubt this explanation of the word wapentac, because the word tac is not found in the Saxon. 1. A contest between nations or states, carried on by force, either for defense, or for revenging insults and redressing wrongs, for the extension of commerce or acquisition of territory, or for obtaining and establishing the superiority and dominion of one over the other. These objects are accomplished by the slaughter or capture of troops, and the capture and destruction of ships, towns, and property. Among rude nations, war is often waged and carried on for plunder. As war is the contest of nations or states, it always implies that such contest is authorized by the monarch or the sovereign power of the nation. When war is commenced by attacking a nation in pence, it is called an offensive war, and such attack is aggressive. When war is undertaken to repel invasion or the attacks of an enemy, it is called defensive, and a defensive war is considered as justifiable. Very few of the wars that have desolated nations and deluged the earth with blood, have been justifiable. Happy would it be for mankind, if the prevalence of Christian principles might ultimately extinguish the spirit of war, and if the ambition to be great, might yield to the ambition of being good.

1. A fluid, the most abundant and most necessary for living beings of any in nature, except air. Water, when pure, is colorless, destitute of taste and smell, ponderous, transparent, and in a very small degree compressible. It is reposited in the earth in inexhaustible quantities, where it is preserved fresh and cool, and from which it issues in springs, which form streams and rivers. But the great reservoirs of water on the globe are the ocean, seas, and lakes, which cover more than three fifths of its surface, and from which it is raised by evaporation, and uniting with the air in the state of vapor, is wafted over the earth, ready to be precipitated in the form of rain, snow, or hail.

Water, by the abstraction or loss of heat, becomes solid, or, in other words, is converted into ice or snow; and by heat it is converted into steam, an elastic vapor, one of the most powerful agents in nature. Water is a compound of oxygen and hydrogen; two volumes or measures of hydrogen gas, and one of oxygen gas. Its proper use was as a pronoun of interrogation, "Hwylc man is of eow?" what man is there of you? Matt. vii. 9. "Hwylc is min modor?" who is my mother? Mark iii. 33. Its use for who, Saxon hwa, as in the Lord's prayer, "Our Father which art in heaven," is an improper application of the word. In its original sense it is used for all genders; as, which man, which woman, which thing? As an interrogative we still use it in this manner. 1. The right use or exercise of knowledge; the choice of laudable ends, and of the best means to accomplish them. This is wisdom in act, effect, or practice. If wisdom is to be considered as a faculty of the mind, it is the faculty of discerning or judging what is most just, proper, and useful; and if it is to be considered as an acquirement, it is the knowledge and use of what is best, most just, most proper, most conducive to prosperity or happiness. Wisdom in the first sense, or practical wisdom, is nearly synonymous with DISCRETION. It differs somewhat from PRUDENCE in this respect; prudence is the exercise of sound judgment in avoiding evils; wisdom is the exercise of sound judgment either in avoiding evils or attempting good. Prudence, then, is a species, of which wisdom is the genus.

WISE, a. [Sax. wis, wise; G. weise; D. wys; Sw. vis; Dan. viis; Sax. wissan, G. wissen, to know; Sans. vid. This, in Dutch, is weeten, to know, which is the Goth. witan, Sax. witan, Eng. to wit, perhaps Gr. εἰδέω. So that wise, wit, weet, wot, are all from one root, or dialectical forms of the same word; Ir. fois, feas, knowledge; W. gwys, gwyz, Sans. vidja, intelligence. In general, the radical sense of know is to reach or to hold, from extension, stretching. In this case, it may be to show, to disclose, from a like sense; for in Sw. visa, Dan. viser, G. weisen, D. wysen, is to show. In this case, L. video, visum, which seems to be connected with this word, may coincide in origin with wide. Wistful, attentive, eager, is from reaching forward.]

"By pleasure and pain I would be understood to mean what delights or molests us;" that is, if it should be asked what I mean by pleasure and pain, I would thus explain what I wish to have understood. In this form of expression, which is very common, there seems to be an implied allusion to an inquiry, or to the supposition of something not expressed.

Would has the sense of wish or pray, particularly in the phrases "would to God," "would God we had died in Egypt," "I would that you knew what conflict I have;" that is, I could wish such a thing, if the wish could avail. Here also there is an implied condition.

Would is used also for wish to do, or to have. What wouldst thou? What would he?

[Walker condemns the pronunciation woond as a "capricious novelty." It is certainly opposed to an important principle of our language, viz., that words in ou, of Saxon origin, retain the regular Saxon sound of ou, as sound, ground, found, &c., while words derived from the French have the sound of ou in that language, as soup, group, &c. It is very undesirable to break in upon this rule, though woond is undoubtedly the fashionable pronunciation. — Ed.]

PREFACE.

THE publishers of Webster's larger English Dictionary, desiring to append to it tables prepared expressly for their edition, which should exhibit the correct pronunciation of Scriptural, Classical, and Modern Geographical Names, requested the subscriber to undertake the direction of the work. This service has been performed in the following manner: —

The list of Scriptural Names added by Taylor to his edition of Calmet's "Dictionary of the Bible," has been carefully collated with that prepared by Walker. In those cases in which the pronunciation of Walker differs from Taylor's, Walker's method has been subjoined, or substituted in its place. The methods of Walker and of Taylor generally coincide, and the authority of Taylor has been preferred to that of Walker in those instances only in which Walker's is opposed by the best and the established usage. The words omitted by Taylor have been added from Walker, and the table, in the number of names and in their pronunciation, is substantially the same with that which usually accompanies Walker's "Key."

The table of Greek and Latin Proper Names contains all the classical names which are found in Walker's table, together with such as are furnished in addition by Trollope, in his edition of Walker's "Key," and by Thomas Swinburne Carr, in his "Classical Pronunciation of Proper Names." A few have also been taken from Pauly's "Encyclopedia of Classical Antiquities," and from Freund's "Dictionary of the Latin Language."

This table has been revised by Professor Thacher, of Yale College. In conducting this revision, he found it necessary to correct numerous errors, especially in the division of words into syllables, which, from errors of the press, a confusion of principles, and a want of care in the application of the rules, have been accumulated in other published tables of Proper Names. It will be seen, on noticing the changes which have been introduced, that the aim has been to remove all inconsistencies in the application of the rules of pronunciation which have been adopted by Walker in common with many others.

A few errors of accent have also been corrected, as more recent investigations have ascertained the quantity of some words, which earlier lexicographers, guided only by the general rules of quantity, had given erroneously.

The pronunciation of these names is in all cases determined by the place of the accent, and by the forms of the syllables which the accent determines. To attempt to indicate to the English ear the sounds of the vowels by marks which in classical usage are employed to indicate their quantity, would only lead to confusion, and cannot fail to be especially disadvantageous to students of the languages. The classical table is accompanied by a few rules, designed to guide the scholar in settling those questions of pronunciation which are not answered in the table itself. These rules do not disagree with those adopted in Walker's "Key;" but, in connection with the table, will guide to that pronunciation which is in vogue at the University of Oxford and other learned schools. It is believed that these few rules will be found to be more convenient and useful than the corresponding ones in Walker's "Key."

Digitized by Google

The same preference will be given, it is believed, to the rules abridged from Walker, which accompany the Scripture Proper Names.

The Modern Geographical Names were mostly selected from Black's "General Atlas," (Edinburgh, 1846,) as being the latest and best authority. The design of the compiler was, primarily, to present the names of the countries, provinces, important towns, rivers, &c., on the continent of Europe and Spanish America, and to indicate their pronunciation as perfectly as this can be represented by English sounds. As these names frequently occur in books of all kinds, and occasion great perplexity to the reader and public speaker, and as their pronunciation is conformed to that of the languages to which they belong, it was thought advisable to prepare a copious list of words of this character, and to give them the chief place in the table. When these words have been Anglicized, the Anglicized has been subjoined to the native pronunciation.

To these European names many others have been added of places in Great Britain and the United States, in respect to the pronunciation of which, it was thought, information would be esteemed of any value, or could be given with any exactness. In a few instances, a provincial, and what will be thought by some an improper, method has been given. It was thought, however, to be impossible and useless to attempt to furnish a complete list of English and American names, with their pronunciation. The pronunciation of the great majority of these names is familiar to all, and is never sought for in a dictionary, while that of a very large number can hardly be considered as fixed.

A few names of places in other and ruder countries are given. There are two reasons, however, why it was not thought expedient to swell the list with names of this character. They are, in most cases, the result of an effort to represent native sounds by English spelling. If this representation is imperfect, it is of little authority, and is liable to constant changes. If it is perfect, or nearly so, the pronunciation is indicated by the name itself.

The catalogue of European names was prepared by a gentleman familiar with the countries and the languages in which the names occur; and it is believed that the pronunciation and the accent are as well represented as the nature of the work and the means at hand would allow. No pains have been spared to render this table as complete and convenient as any within reach of the public.

PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY

SCRIPTURE PROPER NAMES.

FOR THE

PRONUNCIATION OF SCRIPTURE PROPER NAMES.

[ABRIDGED FROM WALKER'S KEY.]

1. In the pronunciation of the letters of the Hebrew proper names, we find nearly the same rules prevail as in those of Greek and Latin. Where the vowels end a syllable with the accent on it, they have their long, open sound; as, Na'bal, Je'hu, Si'rach, Go'shen, and Tu'bal.

2. When a consonant ends the syllable, the preceding vowel is short; as, Sam'u-el, Lem'u-el, Sim'e-on, Sol'o-mon, Suc'coth, Syn'a-gogue.

3. Every final i forming a distinct syllable, though unaccented, has the long, open sound; as, A'i, A-ris'a-i.

4. Every unaccented i ending a syllable not final, is pronounced like e; as, A'ri-el, Ab'di-el, pronounced A're-el, Ab'de-el.

5. The vowels ai are sometimes pronounced in one syllable, and sometimes in two; as, Ben-ai'ah, Hu'shai, Hu'rai, &c.; or, as Sham'ma-i, Shash'a-i, Ber-a-i'ah, &c., following in these, as in most Hebrew proper names, the pronunciation of the Septuagint version of the Bible.

6. Ch is pronounced like k; as, Chemosh, Enoch, &c., pronounced Kemosh, Enok, &c. Cherubim and Rachel seem to be perfectly Anglicized, as the ch in these words is always heard as in the English words cheer, child, riches, &c. The same may be observed of Cherub, signifying an order of angels; but when it means a city of the Babylonish empire, it ought to be pronounced Ke'rub.

7. Almost the only difference in the pronunciation of the Hebrew and the Greek and Latin proper names, is in the sound of the g before e and i. In the last two languages, this consonant is always soft before these vowels; as, Gellius, Gippius, &c., pronounced Jellius, Jippius, &c.; and in the first, it is hard; as, Gera, Gerizim, Gideon, Gilgal, Megiddo, &c. This difference is without foundation in etymology; for both g and c were always hard in the Greek and Latin languages, as well as in the Hebrew; but the latter language being studied so much less than the Greek and Latin, it has not undergone that change which familiarity is sure to produce in all languages. The solemn distance of this language has not been able, however, to keep the letter c from sliding into s before e and i, in the same manner as in the Greek and Latin. Thus, though Gehazi, Gideon, &c., have the g hard, Cedrom, Cedron, Cisai, and Cittern, have the c soft, as if written Sedrom, Sedron, &c. The same may be observed of Igeabarim, Igeal, Nagge, Shage, Pagiel, with the g hard; and Ocidelus, Ocina, and Pharacion, with the c soft, like s.

8. Gentiles, as they are called, ending in ines and ites, as Philistines, Hivites, Hittites, &c., being Anglicized in the translation of the Bible, are pronounced like formatives of our own; as, Philistins, Whitfieldites, Jacobites, &c.

9. The unaccented termination ah, so frequent in Hebrew proper names, ought to be pronounced like the a in father. The a in this termination, however, frequently falls into the indistinct sound heard in the final a in Africa, Ætna, &c.; nor can we easily perceive any distinction in this respect between Elijah and Elisha; but the final h preserves the other vowels open, as Colhozeh, Shiloh, &c., pronounced Colhozee, Shilo, &c. The diphthong ei is always pronounced like ee; thus Sa-mei'us is pronounced as if written Sa-mee'us. But if the accent be on the ah, then the a ought to be pronounced like the a in father; as, Tah'e-ra, Tah'pe-nes, &c.

10. It may be remarked, that there are several Hebrew proper names, which, by passing through the Greek of the New Testament, have conformed to the Greek pronunciation; such as Aceldama, Genezareth, Bethphage, &c., pronounced A-sel'da-ma, Jenez'a-reth, Beth'pha-je, &c. This is, in my opinion, more agreeable to the general analogy of pronouncing these Hebrew-Greek words than preserving the c and g hard.

Rules for the Quantity of the Vowels.

11. In dissyllables, with but one middle consonant, the first vowel is accented and pronounced long; as, Kō'rah, Mō'loch. The same analogy is observed in the penultimate of polysyllables; as, Balthā'sar.

12. When the accent is on the antepenultimate syllable, the vowel is always short, except when followed by two vowels; thus, Je-hos'a-phat. The secondary accent has the same shortening power when the primary accent is on the third and the secondary on the first syllable; as, Oth-o-ni'as.

Rules for placing the Accent on Hebrew Proper Names.

13. The accent of Hebrew words cannot be better regulated than by the laws of the Greek language. By this it is not intended that every word which is Græcized in the Septuagint should be accented exactly according to the Greek rule of accentuation. For many words, that are purely Greek, do, when they are Anglicized, receive the Latin accentuation, instead of retaining the Greek. When the Hebrew word has been Græcized into the same number of syllables, we prefer the Latin accentuation to what may be called our own. Thus we accent Cathua on the penult, since it comes to us through the Greek Καθουά, and because the Latins would have placed the accent on this syllable, and notwithstanding that the English ear would be better pleased with the antepenultimate accent. But when the Hebrew word does not contain the same number of syllables as the same word in the Greek,— as Mes'o-bah, Μεσοβία, Id'u-el, Ἰδουήλος, — it comes under our own analogy, and we place the accent on the antepenultimate.

14. As we never accent a proper name from the Greek on the last syllable, so, if the Greek word be accented on any other syllable, we seldom pay any regard to it, unless it coincide with the Latin accent. Thus the word Ged-e'rah is accented on the penultimate, because it is Græcized by Γαδήρα, though it is accented on the antepenultimate, and this because the penultimate is long, and the long penultimate in Latin always has the accent.

15. All words ending in ias and iah have the accent on the i, without any foundation in the analogy of Greek and Latin pronunciation, except the very vague reason that the Greek word has the accent on this syllable. This reason is called vague, because the Greek accent has no influence on words in ael, iel, ial, &c.; as, Ισραήλ, Ἀβδιήλ, Βελίαλ, κ. τ. λ. Hence the impropriety of pronouncing Messias with the accent on the first syllable. It is the broad, diphthongal sound of the English i, with the accent on it, which makes the word sound so much better in English than it does in French, or even in the true ancient Greek pronunciation.

16. The termination aim seems to attract the accent on the a only in words of more than three syllables; as Ephraim, Mizraim, have the accent on the antepenultimate, but Horona'im, Ramatha'im, &c., on the penultimate. This is the general rule; but if the Greek word have the penultimate long, the accent ought to be on that syllable; as, Pharva'im, Φαρουίμ, &c.

17. Kemuel, Jemuel, Nemuel, and other words of the same form, having the same number of syllables as the Greek words into which they are translated, ought to have the accent on the penultimate, as that syllable is long in Greek; but Emanuel, Samuel, Lemuel, are irrecoverably accented on the antepenultimate, and follow the analogy of the English accentuation.

18. It is plain from these observations, that the Hebrew accent is regulated by a sort of compromise between this ancient language and our own; and the best we can do is to form a kind of compound ratio of Hebrew, Greek, Latin, and English, and to let each of these prevail as usage has permitted them.

SCRIPTURE PROPER NAMES.

THE basis of the following Vocabulary is that of Taylor, in "Calmet's Dictionary of the Bible." To this have been added several hundred names from Walker. In the cases in which the pronunciation of Walker differs from that of Taylor, that of Walker is added or substituted in its place. The pronunciation of Walker is not always to be preferred, nor is it followed in actual usage by the best authorities. The notation of the vowel sounds may be consulted below. — ED.

PRONOUNCING THE VOWELS AND CONSONANTS

GREEK AND LATIN PROPER NAMES.

It will be perceived by a glance at the following table, that the indicated accentuation of the words, and their separation into syllables, prevent the necessity of inserting any thing here to guide to a correct pronunciation, except the rules for the sounds of the vowels and consonants.

In settling the place of the primary accent, which is the first and most important point in the pronunciation of a word, the aim, of course, has been to follow the ancient and simple rules, which direct, that, in words of two syllables, the penult be accented, and in words of more than two syllables, that the penult be accented if long in quantity, if not, the antepenult. The words have been divided into syllables, in accordance with the commonly received rules on that subject. The rules that follow have been derived, in the main, from Walker. Sometimes the language of Grant, or some other grammarian, has been preferred.

Rules for the Vowels.

1. Any vowel at the end of an accented syllable, and e, o, and u, at the end of an unaccented syllable, have the long English sound; as, Ca'to, Ce'crops, Di'do, So'lon, Cu'mæ, Me-lis'sa, Mo-los'sus, Tu-lin'gi; in which words the final vowels of the first syllables have the same sound as the corresponding vowels in the first syllables of the English words pa'per, ce'dar, si'lent, co'lon, du'ty.

2. A, ending an unaccented syllable, has the sound of a in fa'ther; as, Ga-bi'na, A-re'ne, pronounced Gah-bi'na, Ah-re'ne.

3. I, ending a final syllable, or preceding an accented vowel, has the long sound; as, I-u'li.

In all other cases, i, ending an unaccented syllable, is pronounced like e; as, Fa'bi-i, Ho-ra'ti-i, pronounced Fa'be-i, Ho-ra'te-i.

4. Y is pronounced as i would be in the same situation.

5. Æ and œ are pronounced as e would be in the same situation.

6. If a syllable end in a consonant, the vowel has the short English sound; as, Bal'bus, Del'phi, Cin'na, Mos'chus, Tus'cus, in which the vowels have the same sounds as in the English words man'ner, sel'dom, din'ner, scof'fer, mus'ter.

Exception. — E, in final es, is pronounced as in the familiar proper name An'des.

Rules for the Consonants.

1. C, before e, i, y, æ, and œ, is pronounced like s; before a, o, and u, and before consonants, like k; as, Ce'a, Cic'e-ro, Cy'prus, Cæ'sar, Cæ'li-a, Ca'to, Co'cles, Cu'mæ.

2. G, before e, i, y, æ, œ, or another g followed by e, has the sound of j; before a, o, and u, and before consonants other than g, as above excepted, the hard sound, as in the English words gave, gone; as, Ge'lo, Gi-gan'tes, Gy-gæ'us, Ag'ger, Ga'bi-i, Gor'gi-as, Sa-gun'tum.

3. Ch has the sound of k, except when preceding a mute consonant at the beginning of a word, when they are silent; as, Chtho'ni-a, pronounced Tho'ni-a.

4. T, s, and c, before ia, ie, ii, io, iu, and eu, preceded immediately by the accent, in Latin words, as in English, change into sh and zh. But when the accent falls on the first of the vowels following, the consonant does not change into sh or zh, but preserves its pure sound; as, Mil-ti'a-des, &c. T, in the termination tion, also retains its original sound; as, The-o-do'ti-on.

5. S has, in general, the sound of s in this.

Final s, preceded by e, or a liquid, has the sound of z.

6. Initial x has the sound of z.

7. Initial ph, before a mute, is silent, as, Phthi'a, pronounced Thi'a. Initial p, before s, is silent; as, Psy'che, pronounced Sy'ke. Initial p, before t, is silent; as, Ptol-e-mæ'us, pronounced Tol-e-mæ'us.

8. At the beginning of Greek words we frequently find the uncombinable consonants mn, tm, &c.; as, Mne-mos'y-ne, Tmo'lus, &c. These are to be pronounced with the first consonant mute, as if written Ne-mos'y-ne, Mo'lus, &c.

GREEK AND LATIN PROPER NAMES.

THE words in the following table to which a * is prefixed are taken from "The Classical Pronunciation of Proper Names," &c., by Thomas Swinburne Carr.

Those to which a † is prefixed are such as Trollope has added to his edition of Walker's Key.

Those marked with a ‡ are taken from Freund's "Wörterbuch der lateinischen Sprache."

Those marked with a ¶ are taken from Pauly's "Real-Encyclopädie der classischen Alterthumswissenschaft."

Those to which no mark is prefixed are found in the list usually published with Walker's Key.

It will be observed, by any who may compare this table with those of Walker and Trollope, that many changes in the division of words for pronunciation have been introduced; but it is believed that these changes are all required by a consistent application of the rules of classical pronunciation, as they are generally received.

MODERN GEOGRAPHICAL NAMES.

Digitized by Google

BRIEF RULES

FOR THE

PRONUNCIATION OF THE PRINCIPAL EUROPEAN LANGUAGES.

FRENCH.

1. Vowels.

A, ah, long and short, (marked ä.)
ai, as e in there, when followed by e, re, rs, ts, s, and when it has the circumflex, thus, aî, (ê.)
When in the middle or at the end of words, it has the sound of the open acute é, (ę.)
au has the sound of ō, (o.)
E has three sounds: —
é as the English vowel a in fate, (e.)
è and ê are similar to the e in there, (ê.)
E, not accented, is either,
(1.) open acute, as e in the English words met, ebb, when it is followed, in the same syllable, by a consonant that is pronounced, or when the following syllable begins with x, (ė;)
(2.) guttural, and like e in her at the end of monosyllables, or the first syllable of polysyllables, (ę;) or,
(3.) is entirely mute at the end of polysyllables. It is like the second e in there, and generally serves to lengthen or open the preceding vowel. In other places, where it is more perceptible, it is like the e in battery or over; and even then the French suppress it as often as they can, especially when the preceding or following syllable has a full sound. — Rem. Es, not accented, in polysyllables, is silent.
Ei has the sound of e in there, (ėu.)
Eu has three sounds. —
(1.) long and close. This sound has no standard in English, but it may be obtained by pressing the lips a little forward, in such a manner as to leave to the breath a narrower passage than for the e in over, and by dwelling longer upon it, (e͡u.)
(2.) short, somewhat more open than e in over, (e͡ŭ.)
(3.) long and open, by opening the lips somewhat wider and in a more circular form than for the e in over, and by protracting the sound, (ė͡u.)
I is long, as in the English word marīne, and short, as in fig, (ī, i.)
O has three sounds: —
(1.) long and open, as in the English word rōbe, (ō.)
(2.) short, as in rob, (o.)
(3.) long and broad, (o.)
oi as wa.
ou has two sounds, — long, as in mood; short, as in good, (o͞o.)
U has two sounds, — long, as in vue, (u͞;) short, as in but, (ŭ.)

There is no standard for these sounds in English. To form the first, observe the situation of the tongue in pronouncing the English letter a. It widens itself into the cheeks, so that it touches the first grinders. When the tongue is in this situation, advance both lips a little forward, shutting them at the same time in such a manner as to leave a narrow, oval passage to the breath. This movement will lightly press the tongue between the grinders, and its tip against the fore teeth of the inferior jaw, and thus let the breath pass, which is necessary to emit the sound of the French u. The short sound is formed by dwelling less upon it.

2. Consonants.

Division of Syllables. — When syllables in any word are separated by a single or compound consonant, that consonant is to be spelled and articulated with the following vowel, and not with the preceding one. By several consonants which cannot form a compound consonant, the first must be spelled with the preceding, and the remainder with the succeeding, simple or compound vowel.

Compound consonants are the following: — bl, br, ch, cl, chr, cr, dr, fl, fr, gl, gn, gr, il, and ill, (when liquid,) ph, phl, phr, pl, pr, rh, sc, sg, sl, sm, sn, sp, st, sr, th, thl, tr, tl, vr.

The French syllables are divided into masculine and feminine syllables, the latter being those that contain e mute.

General Rule. — Every masculine syllable before another masculine syllable is short, so that the accent lies upon the last syllable that is pronounced.

B has the same sound as in English.
C has,
(1.) the sound of English k before a, o, u, and before consonants;
(2.) the sound of hard s before e, i, y, and before the hard vowels, a, o, u, when with a cedilla, (ç.)
c, before q and c, and after a nasal sound, is always silent.
ch has the sound of sh, and followed by a consonant, it is like k. At the end, it sounds like k.
D is like English d. It is sounded at the end of words, unless followed by s or preceded by r or n.
F is like English f.
G has two sounds: —
(1.) the sound of g in go, before a, o, u.
(2.) the sound of s in pleasure before e, i, y.
The hard g is rendered soft before a, o, u, by inserting the letter e between g and a, o, u. The e after the g is then not to be sounded, but is considered as a mark to show that the g must be pronounced soft.
The soft g, on the other hand, is rendered hard before e, i, y, by writing the letter u between g and e, i, y. Therefore the u that is immediately after the g must not be sounded, but is to be considered as a sign that g must be articulated hard.
gn is pronounced like ni in onion, minion, (final gne, represented in the table ny.)
Final g is silent except in the noun bourg, and in nouns terminating in berg, where it has the sound of k.
H is either aspirated or silent

Remark. — When h is deemed aspirate, it only communicates to the vowel the properties of a consonant; that is to say, when the preceding word ends with a vowel, that vowel is never suppressed; if it ends with a consonant, that consonant is never connected with the vowel that follows.

J has always the sound of z in azure, or s in pleasure.
L has two sounds: —
(1.) It is like the English l.
(2.) It is liquid, like l in brilliant.

N. B. — The modern pronunciation, however, lets the l entirely disappear, and substitutes a long é sound (ī, ıı) for it.

Exception. — All nouns in ville are not liquid.

Digitized by Google

ll, ill, preceded by another vowel, are always liquid, in which case, il, ill, are compound consonants, the i being considered as a mere sign to make the l liquid; therefore the i must not be combined with the preceding vowel, which preserves its natural sound.

M, N, } when not nasal, are like the English m, n.

m, n, preceded in the same syllable by a vowel, are always nasal, unless followed by a syllable that begins with a vowel or h mute, in which case, m and n resume their natural sound.

NASAL SOUND. — An exact standard for the nasal sound is not to be found in the English pronunciation. However, something like it is found in the sound of en in encore. But if, in pronouncing these sounds, the tongue should once touch the roof of the mouth, the French nasal sound would be ruined.

There are four nasal sounds: — em, am, en, an, } ang.

om, on, aun, } ong, or ong.

im, in, aim, ain, eim, ein, o–in, } ing.

um, un, eun, eum, } ung.

P is like the same letter in the English language.

Q, except in a few words, is always followed by u, and these two letters together have the sound of English k in king.

R is much more rolled than the English r. At the end of a word it is always pronounced, when preceded by a, i, o, u, y, and their compounds r, preceded by e in polysyllables, is silent, and in this case the e has the acute sound e. In monosyllables, the r is pronounced, and the e has a more open sound, resembling e.

rh is like r.

S has two sounds: —

(1.) the soft of rose, please, between two vowels and following b.

(2.) the hard sound of sister, in the beginning, and in the middle of a word, when preceded or followed by a consonant.

Final s is silent, with a few exceptions.

T has two sounds: —

(1.) soft, like c in cedar, civil, in the syllable tion, unless preceded by s or x, in which case the t is hard.

(2.) hard, like t in tit, in all other cases.

th has the single sound of t hard.

t, st, ct, final, are silent.

V is like English v.

X, (1.) is like gs in all words beginning in x or ex, followed by a vowel or the letter h.

(2.) like k in words beginning in exce, exci, exs.

(3.) like ss, in Aix, Aix la Chapelle, Auxerre, Auxonne, Bruxelles, Luxeuil, and some few others.

(4.) like ks in all other cases.

Final x is silent.

Z is like z in zone.

Final z is silent.

Y is like single French i, but like double i between two vowels.

ITALIAN.

1. VOWELS.

A is sounded as ah in English, (a.)

E has two sounds: —

(1.) the open, as in the English word fair, (e and e.)

(2.) close, as in the word pain, (e)

I is sounded like ee in English.

O has two sounds: —

(1.) the open o; (2.) the close o.

U is sounded like oo.

N. B. — When these vowels are at the end of words, marked with an accent, they have a quick and sharp sound.

2. CONSONANTS.

B is like the same letter in English.

C is like k before a, o, u. Followed by the vowels e, i, it is pronounced like ch in the words cherry, chilly.

gg, followed by e, i, is pronounced like dg in the English word lodge.

gh, followed by e, i, has the sound of g in go.

gia, gio, giu, are pronounced like ja, jo, joo.

gua, gue, gui, are like gwa, gwei, gwee, in language, languei, languid.

H has no sound. It is only used to denote the hard sound of the consonants c, g, before the vowels e, i.

J is considered a vowel. It is used instead of ii at the end of words, and sounds like ee in the English word fee, each e being distinctly pronounced.

L, M, N, and P, are like the corresponding English letters.

Q. Qua, que, qui, quo, are pronounced like qua, que, qui, quo, in the English words quality, question, quibble, quote; the vowels a, e, i, o, adhering to their proper pronunciation, as stated above.

R, in the beginning of words, or in the middle when it begins a syllable, is like r in the words ruin, marine. At the end of words, or when it ends a syllable, or preceded by another consonant, or doubled, it has a rolling sound.

S, in the beginning of words, preceded or followed by another consonant, or when doubled, is pronounced sharp, like sister. Between two vowels, and in the last syllable of all substantive and adjective nouns that end in ese, uso, usa, it is pronounced like s in the English word rose. In the last syllable of all adjective nouns in oso, osa, s preserves its sharp sound.

REMARK. — Italian words are pronounced exactly as they are written, there being no silent letter, except h. Every vowel always preserves its proper sound, independently of the consonants which accompany it.

SPANISH.

1. VOWELS.

A. This letter is pronounced as ah in English, (a.)

E is pronounced as a in the alphabet in English, (e,) except before n, r, s, z, in which case it is more open, as in the English word care.

I is pronounced as e in English. It is long when under the acute accent, (i.)

O is generally pronounced as in English. It is, however, necessary to observe, that it is sometimes open, (o,) sometimes close, (o,) and sometimes long, (o.)

It is open in words of one syllable, when it is not immediately followed by another vowel, and before n and r at the end of a syllable; at the end of a word, when it is accented. It is long whenever it is immediately followed by another vowel.

Digitized by Google

U is pronounced oo.

N. B. — From this rule must be excepted the syllables gue, gui, que, qui, in which the u is not sounded, unless the u has two dots over it, (ü.)

Y. This letter is sometimes a vowel and sometimes a consonant. It is a vowel when it is preceded by another vowel, making with it a diphthong; and then ay and ey are like i, (ī;)
oy and uy, like oi.
In almost every other case, it is a consonant.

2. Consonants.

B, in the beginning of a word, is always pronounced as in English. In the middle of a word, between two vowels, b is softened into nearly a v.

C has the sound of th in English, as in the word pith, before e and i; and the sound of k before a, o, u.
Formerly the c with the cedilla (ç) was used to soften the c before a, o, u. The letter z, however, has now been substituted for it.
Double cc, followed by e, i. The first c is hard, the second soft.
ch. These two letters are pronounced as in English in the word cheek.

D is pronounced, in the beginning of a word, as in English; but when the d is between two vowels, it is as soft as the th in the words though, the. It is pronounced lisping at the end of a word.

F is pronounced as in English.

G is pronounced as in English before a, o, u. It is guttural before e, i, (ğ.) Before n, it has the English pronunciation.
For the syllables gue, gui, see the vowel U.

H is mute, and only lightly aspirated before ue. The letter h has been retained in many words, though not pronounced, and in several it has taken the place of the letter f, formerly used.
th. The Academy suppresses h after t, and instead of ph uses f.

J is guttural before all the vowels, (ğ, čh.)

L is pronounced as in English.
ll. When ll occurs in a word, it is liquid, and pronounced as in the words brilliant, seraglio, William.

M and N are pronounced as in English.
ñ, having this mark, (¯, ñ,) which the Spaniards call n with tilde, (tĭl'dę,) has the same sound as n in onion, minion.

P and Q are pronounced as in English.
As to the syllables que, qui, look for the vowel U.

N. B. — Q is changed into c in all words where it is followed by ua, uo, ue, ui, (the u in the latter two preserving its natural sound.)

R, in the beginning and middle of words, is pronounced a little stronger than in English; but double r is much stronger than the English rr.

S is always pronounced hard, like double s, even between two vowels.

T is always hard.

V. The Spaniards often confound the sound of this letter with that of b; but the Academy disapproves of it, and recommends that it should be pronounced as in English.

X is pronounced as s when followed by a consonant; and it is lightly sounded s when followed by ce, ci. It is pronounced like ks between two vowels. In a few words ending in x, it is guttural.

N. B. — X was formerly used as a guttural, (unless the following vowel had the circumflex accent;) but j is now used instead before a, o, u, and g before e and i.

Z is only used now before a, o, u, and is pronounced like the c before e and i. It is always pronounced lisping after a vowel.

The pronunciation of Spanish by the Mexicans is different from that by the Spaniards: —
(1.) They pronounce the liquid ll like the modern French pronunciation long ee.
(2.) They pronounce b and v interchangeably.
(3.) They substitute, in general, the s sound for the th sound.

When preceded by n, g (except in derivative and compound words) has the sound of a gentle k.

H, in the beginning of a word or syllable, is aspirated, as in the English words have, hold. Between two vowels, the aspiration is less strong, and sometimes hardly perceptible. At any other place than in the beginning of a word or a syllable, h is mute, and indicates then the length of the preceding vowel.

There are nine vowels, a, e, i, o, u, y, å, ä, (æ,) ö, (æ;) and it is to be remarked, that they are never found compound.

1. Vowels.

A is like the German a.
å is long o, (ō.)
ä (æ) is like the German ä, (æ.)
E has two different pronunciations: —
(1.) long, (the close and acute sound of the German e, — ę,) in the beginning of words, where e makes a syllable by itself, and at the end of a syllable or a word, as also in all syllables that have the tonic accent, and in all words terminating in het.

k, before the vowels i, y, æ, ø, and e acute, is pronounced as if there were Swedish j between k and the vowel.
In common pronunciation, k before the mentioned vowels, and kj before a, o, u, å, sound like English ch.
L, beginning a word, and followed by y, is almost silent, the y alone being pronounced, with a slight liquid sound before it.

DANISH.

1. Vowels.

The Danish language has eight vowels: — a, e, i, o, u, y, å, (æ,) ø, (ø.) There is but one combined vowel that changes pronunciation. The doubling of the other vowels, which hardly takes place except with e, i, u, indicates only the length of the syllable.
The diphthongs are ai, ei, oi, øi, (øi,) au, eu, ou, ui. These make two distinct sounds, pronounced by a single emission of the voice.
A has the two sounds of German a, (ä.)
aa is pronounced long o, (ō;) ae (ä) is like the corresponding German ae.
ai is similar to the German ai, (ī;) au is like the German au.

(2.) at the end of the infinitive of verbs after a vowel, (e being the proper termination of the infinitive of all verbs;)
(3.) at the end of adjectives that terminate in a vowel, under the inflection;
(4.) in the middle of some words, after a long vowel, to distinguish two words, which without the e would have the same orthography, though the vowels have a different length in pronunciation.
ee. The vowels e, i, u, are doubled in the middle of monosyllables, to indicate the e, i, u, long, except before the consonants b, d, g, v, p.

The consonants are like the English, with the following exceptions: —

C is always joined with some other consonant.
cs is like ch.

Zs is like the French j.
Y is almost always a consonant. (See dy, gy, ty.) Immediately preceded by l and n, it serves to make these letters liquid, corresponding to the Spanish ll, ñ, as in brilliant, onion.

POLISH.

1. Vowels.

A has the two sounds of the German a.
E accented (é) has the German long æ sound; unaccented, the German short e sound.

Z is like English z. Z, with a point over it, (ż,) is like French j; and z with an accent, (z',) which has no exact equivalent in English, resembles somewhat the ż.

WELSH.

The consonants are divided into mutes and semivowels, and again into labials, dentals, and palatals.

The vowels are of two kinds — the immutable and the mutable.

The mutable vowels are, a, e, o, w; the vowels that suffer no change, i, u, y.

The consonants, under the class of mutes, are b, p, c, g, d, t.

The semivowels are vocal and aspirated.

Vocal semivowels, z, x, l, m, n, r; and the aspirates, ç, ng, ngh, f, h, th.

L, m, n, r, are also distinguished by the name of liquids.

The consonants may be thus classed: —

Labials.	Dentals.	Palatals.
b, v, f, m, p, mh.	d, z, n, t, th, nh, s.	c, ç, ngh, g, ng, h, ll, l, r

There are various combinations of the vowels in the Welsh, forming diphthongs, triphthongs, and others, to the extent, in some cases, of six coming together.

All the vowels preserve their own primitive sounds under every circumstance of combination, without any deviation. So, therefore, whatever number come together, the sounds to be expressed are those of all such combined vowels, but rapidly passed over. There are instances of six vowels coming together, requiring so many quick inflections of the voice to express them.

The following is a list of the common combinations of the vowels: —

aa	ea	ey	iy	ow	uy	wy
ae	ei	ia	oa	ua	wa	ya
ai	eo	ie	oe	ue	we	yc
aw	eu	io	oi	uo	wi	yo
ay	ew	iw	ou	uw	wo	yw

aea	aia	aua	awa	awy	eia	euo	ewy	iau	ieu	wae	wei
aeo	aie	aue	awe	eai	eio	ewa	iae	iaw	oea	wai	wiw
aew	aio	auo	awo	eaw	eua	ewi	iai	iei	oia	waw	wyw

1. Vowels.

A, (1.) short or open a, in man, bar, as, glass.
(2.) long, or â, is the same sound extended, as in care, dare.
E, (1.) short, as in men, bed, fervent.
(2.) long, or ê, as the French ê, as in même.
I, (1.) long, as in street, keep
(2.) short, as in king, sing.
O, (1.) long, or ô, as in the words note, bone, gone.
(2.) short, as in go, no, got, not, lot, from.
U has the sound of English u in busy, and of i as in sin, thin, live.
W, (1.) is sounded as oo in good, hood; and as u in the word full.
(2.) long, or ŵ, has the sound of oo in mood, rood.
Y, (1.) has the sound of u, as in the words run, turn, and of i as in first.
(2.) long, or ŷ, is sounded like the English y in Sunday, and is like the Welsh u, or less open than the y short.

2. Consonants.

The names of the consonants were anciently formed by sounding the vowel i after all of them; but in the present popular mode, the following are exceptions to that rule, and they begin their sounds with e, c, ç, z, v, f, g, ng, ngh, h, ll, l, m, n, r, s.

The sounds of the consonants, like the vowels, are preserved invariably in all their combinations. The sounds of the letters must be considered as the perfect standard of the pronunciation of the Welsh language.

(A.) Labial Sounds.

The letters b, v, f, m, p, have the same sound as in English.

The mutation of the p, denoted by mh, is a kind of aspirated m, whose power may be found by uniting the sound of m, in the word am, to h, in the word here, by a quick pronunciation of the phrase I am here.

(B.) Dental Sounds.

The d, n, s, are the same as the corresponding English letters.

The z, which is a mutation of d, has the soft or flat sound of th, as in the words thus, neither.

The t has the sound of English t in not, ten, to, but does not take the sound of s in any case.

The th, which is a mutation of t, has always the sharp and hard sound of English th, in the words thank, both, nothing.

The nh, another mutation of t, is a sort of aspirated n, whose power is perceivable in the word inherent.

(C.) Palatal Sounds.

The h, l, n, r, are similar to the same English letters.

The c is always sounded like English k.

The ç, (or ch,) being a mutation of c, is a sound which has no standard in English, but is the same as the ch of the German, or the χ of the Greek.

It is produced by the contact of the tongue and the palate about the eighth of an inch farther back than when k is expressed.

The ngh is another modification of c, the power of which may be made out in the word Nottingham, by suspending the breath on the letter i, instead of the proper division of the word.

The g is always like the English hard g, as in go, give, again, leg, peg.

The ll is a sound peculiar to the Welsh; but the Spanish ll approaches very near to it. The sound is produced by touching the palate with the tongue, about an eighth of an inch farther back than when l is articulated.

The accentuation of all words is known by one general rule; that is, such as consist of several syllables have the accent on the penultima, and upon every second syllable backwards. The same principle is applied to several monosyllables coming together, by accenting every second word to the last but one inclusively.

GAELIC.

The Gaelic language has five vowels and thirteen consonants.

1. Vowels.

A is sounded as in the English words hall, halt; but before dh and gh, it has often the sound of the diphthong ao.
E represents two different sounds:—
(1.) that of the Greek ε, or ea in the English word bear.
(2.) that of a in care.
I is like ee in English.
O has the different sounds of bone, morn, lot.
U is like oo in moon, fool.

The vowels are divided into broad, a, o, u, and small, e, i.

In a word of two or more syllables, if the former ends with a broad vowel, the next syllable must begin with a broad vowel; if with a small vowel, with a small, though these inserted vowels are never pronounced. But in compound words, this rule may often be properly dispensed with.

All the vowels are either long or short. When long, they are generally accented.

In all the syllables of polysyllables, except the first, the vowels have a short and obscure sound, as in the English words sun, bird, mother; and the broad, and sometimes the small, are used for one another.

There are thirteen diphthongs, which are either proper or improper.

Ao and eu are improper, representing simple sounds; the former of which is only attainable by the ear; the latter is like that of the Greek ε, (epsilon.) All the other diphthongs are proper, the sound of each of the vowels being more or less heard. In æ, ai, ei, oi, io, ia, ua, ui, the last vowel, and in ia, io, iu, the first vowel, is but faintly sounded.

There are five triphthongs, aoi, eoi, iai, iui, uai. They are pronounced like the diphthongs ao, eo, ia, iu, ua, with the addition of a short i. They are all long, and never occur but in monosyllables, or the first syllable of polysyllables.

2. Consonants.

The consonants are, b, c, d, f, g, h, l, m, n, p, r, s, t.

Consonants are mutable or immutable.

Mutable are such as, by having an h subjoined to them, either alter or lose their usual sound, viz., b, c, d, f, g, m, p, s, t.

Immutable are such as are never aspirated, or have an h subjoined to them, viz., the liquids l, n, r.

After a short vowel or diphthong, the consonants are generally pronounced as when written double in English.

A consonant standing alone is sounded as if it were the initial letter of the following word, if it begins with a vowel, or as the final letter of the preceding word, if it ends with a vowel.

Bh and mh have the sound of v in English. Mh, in the middle or end of polysyllables, is either silent or stands for a gentle aspiration.
C is always sounded as English k. Ch has the sound of the Greek χ, or of gh in lough, as the Irish pronounce it.
Dh and gh, in the beginning of words, are commonly sounded like the English consonant y. In the middle or end of words, they are often silent, or have the sound of a [faint aspiration.
Fh is silent.
G is always sounded as in the English words get, good.
Ph has the sound of English f.
S, before or after a broad vowel in the same syllable, is as in English. But when immediately before or after a small vowel, it has the sound of sh. S, in the beginning of words, when preceded by the article with t intervening, is silent.
Sh and th, in the beginning of words, have the sound of h alone
Th, after a long vowel, diphthong, or triphthong, is nearly silent; but after a short vowel or diphthong, it has the force of a rapid aspiration.

The immutable consonants l, n, r, when initials of words, not connected with others in a sentence, have a soft double sound, to be learned only by the ear. But whenever the order of construction requires that the mutable consonants should be aspirated, the immutable lose their double sound, and are pronounced nearly as in English.

When the consonants l, n, r, have their double sound in the middle or end of words, they are written double.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE TABLE.

In the preparation of the following table, the compiler has aimed at the utmost possible simplicity. For this reason, he has employed in his key as small a number of English sounds as was possible, and has preferred to refer most of the sounds in the several languages to their nearest English equivalents, rather than to introduce a separate notation and key for each language To do the last, would have been to destroy the simplicity, and, in a great measure, to defeat the object, of the table, which was designed for easy reference, by all classes of readers. It will be sufficient, once for all, to observe, that certain sounds in several of the languages of Europe can be but imperfectly represented by the English letters and syllables which are given as their equivalents. The Swedish u is represented by the English oo or the French u. The Danish g final, not preceded by n, corresponds nearly to the English h guttural. The Dutch ui, uy, is represented by the English oi. In the German, a is indicated by the English a in far; g and ch are marked as gutturals; ö, æ, and ü, ue, correspond to the French eu and u; ai is indicated by i long; eu by the English oi. The Polish z has no corresponding English sound. The Spanish g soft and j differ from the German ch guttural in being pronounced also from the palate. In the French, u has no corresponding English sound; eu is nearly like the u in the English spur; m and n nasal are indicated by ng, but the sound of g should not be heard in the pronunciation; l mouillé final is indicated by ly, gne final by ny; in both these cases, the sound of y consonant being added to that of the l and n, as in brilliant and mignonette; oi is also expressed by wa, a being sounded as in far, except oin, in which a is sounded as in bat. In all names not English, ch at the end of syllables not guttural is toh.
